

What is the difference between the Therapist and Instructor workshop?

The Therapist workshop is designed for PTs/OTs who administer therapeutic treatment to people with Parkinson's, with a focus on integrating the PWR!Moves into personal goals and task-based practice to improve functional mobility in real-world environments. The Exercise Instructor workshop is designed for fitness professionals, including therapists, who will be teaching the PWR!Moves in a group fitness or class setting. They are independent of each other, but if you meet the eligibility requirements, you can take both workshops. One is not required before the other.

After I complete a workshop, when does my PWR!Moves certification expire?

All workshop certifications are valid for 3 years from the year you were certified. The "valid through" date is printed on the certificate you receive when you complete the workshop. Once the 3 years have passed, you will need to recertify to remain PWR!Moves certified.

There are two Therapist recertification options. Which one do I choose, and what if I'm interested in both?

You are free to take either the Freezing of Gait (FOG) or the Refresher recertification workshop when it's time to recertify – both will extend your PWR!Moves certification for another 3 years. If both are of interest to you, you can take both, but you will only be PWR!Moves certified for 3 years after the most recent workshop you take. You cannot 'stack' recertification workshops to extend your certification beyond 3 years.

How long does Recertification last?

Completing a recertification workshop will extend your PWR!Moves certification for another 3 years, at which time you would need to recertify again to remain PWR!Moves certified.

I took the Instructor workshop and it's been three years. Do I need to recertify?

Yes, you need to recertify to remain PWR!Moves certified for another 3 years. Currently, this means taking the Instructor workshop again, which was revamped in January, 2022.
